➤ Lecture-Examples:

- Young Israelis who currently leave the country to Europe (and Berlin precisely) due to the high cost of living and unaffordable housing prices in their homeland. On October 2013, Matan Hodorov broadcasted a series of special reports regarding this economic-national phenomenon, which was mainly filmed in Berlin, London and New Jersey. All of these documentary pieces are now available (in Hebrew) at: <http://news.nana10.co.il/Article/?ArticleID=1008597>. These reports have widely attracted media's attention and were therefore followed by many articles such as these (English) ones:

Jerusalem Post: <http://www.jpost.com/Opinion/Columnists/Think-About-It-Why-Israelis-moved-to-Europe-329878>
- Israeli-Europe commercial relations, shadowed by modern anti-Semitism and political objections in the continent to Israel's policy.
- One Country, Two Economies: On the one hand, Israel presents an impressive macro-economic picture: With relative rapid growth and historical low rate of unemployment, it is considered by many experts as story of success. However, Israel also faces widening gap between classes; unaffordable housing prices; injustice allocation of public resources between various sectors; and high cost of living and pension problem ahead among young workers. The lack of satisfaction among civilians, mainly because of division of budget, has resulted in a large social protest in 2011, which continues to influence on decision making in the domestic political field.
- Aliyah from A to Z: All of the needed details for people who consider to permanently joining Israel as citizens and partners of the Jewish State.
- Other "Israel Today" issues, including the Israeli-Arab conflict as well as Europe's role in handling the instability in the Middle East.
- One Crisis, Different Results: How come Israel has relatively managed to successfully go through the economic diminution and recession, while Europe is still struggling for the sake of the union? What are the major differences in policy and structures which led to the huge gap in economic outcomes?
